Summary of Information

✓ The people involved at the site are primarily or exclusively male. They are serious, almost grim, with a sense of altruism or dedication to a cause. They cooperate together towards a goal that is not publicized, is behind the scenes, and involves non-disclosure and manipulativeness. They are presently planning or orchestrating something. The color blue, as in uniform blue clothing, is significant. They are non-US, and there is a slight sense of southern hemisphere. A structure is involved that is several stories high, alternating white and dark layers, with lots of gentle curves but few angles, and seemingly exotic. It is nestled/perched in a contoured land form. It has an elegant interior, and a sense of exclusivity. A/S of a hotel or office building near a beach.

✓ In a way, it seems to be some sort of blue-chip think tank, but one where the emphasis is more on "doing" or carrying out what is here thought about. Ideas are originated, organized and resourced, then carried out. A/S of a fusion between Det-S and a special operations unit. The people here gather together to interface, but go off as ones and twos in different directions to return later after completing their "errands." There is a sense of serious, meaningful content to what they do--perhaps even potentially dangerous.

There was additionally one brief vignette of several of them huddling together over an electronic device that they are either assembling or dissecting or both. They find it interesting and exciting.

In a way, seem to be some sort of blue-chip think tank, but are also more into "doing" what they think out - think up, then implement. Like a DET-5, Special Ops fusion.

Gotha speaks, but ones + two go in different directions to return later after running their "errands".

Sense a serious, meaningful content to what they do, perhaps even potentially dangerous,

Imperson of several buddies together in an electronic device that they are assembling in dissecting a bomb. It is exciting for them.

Summary of Information

Site involves a tall, wide, massive structure that seems to taper inward. It is off-white or beige in color, is smoothed concrete, with some sort of cornice, fluting or border around the edges. It is very monolithic, solid, massive, dense, and thick. There is what appears to be a green, red and black flag associated with it. The people connected with it can be found both inside and outside of it. There is something "uniform" about them--not that they're all the same, but they are here together because of many things they have in common. The things in common are what's significant about their involvement--it's what the things they're doing revolve around. They have a certain esprit de corps--almost like they're all "family." They interact and cooperate well, toward a common objective. The goal seems to be civic-directed--in a sense a service for a larger polity or social group. There is a sense of professionalism, of belonging to a brotherhood with a set of specific responsibilities and code of ethics that is beyond what the individual requires normally--it's like an elite organization of some kind--separated apart, yet with ties that extend outward to those who do not directly belong--perhaps clients of some sort. There is a sense of government or technical service, AOL/S of "institute."

Summary of Information

A group of people are present at the site going to and fro, carrying bundles and stacking them up. A sense of arranging, stockpiling, staging ("in the sense of staging an operation"), of preparing is present. The bundles are of varying sizes, some rather large, and soft sided, though tightly packed. [An ADL was produced of bales of tobacco and cotton sitting by the river bank in the Old South waiting for the steamboat to pick them up.] These bundles are "preparing to move." They are collected together outside in the open air in a sort of a clearing in a forested area that is warm and humid with a large, relatively placid water course nearby. This is a different place than reported in Session 001, but there is some sort of connection between the two.
